The speakers will consider bodies—individuals' experiences of, fantasies about, and difficulties talking (and not talking) about their bodies. They will present case material and broader thinking about people's wishes to change their bodies. Drs. Astrachan and Pan will present a series of medical vignettes about patients who have pursued various reconstructive procedures. Dr. Lieberman will describe several cases in which patients became irrationally obsessed with their bodies and sought surgery to alleviate their anxieties. She will demonstrate how she uses visual feedback and language attuned to the apparent concreteness of such patients. Professor Lemma will describe an object-relational framework for understanding the unconscious fantasies that may drive the pursuit of body modification in some individuals. Three such fantasies will be outlined: the self-made fantasy, the reclaiming fantasy and the "perfect match."

Ample time will be allotted for discussion with the audience.
